IAPMO offers free online education courses

Ontario, Calif. (Feb. 7, 2008) —The International Association of Plumbing and Mechanical Officials (IAPMO) Online Learning Center is offering more than 300 online courses free of charge. These are non-technical courses geared toward individuals seeking professional development training that supplements their code knowledge and assists them in developing valuable job skills that do not directly correlate to the codes. A variety of courses are being offered, including the following topics:

- Industrial Safety
- Ethics
- Staff and Leadership Development
- Organizational Skills
- Sexual Harassment
- Communication Skills
- Management Skills
- Computer Skills
- Project Management

“We believe that offering these online courses free to our members, our partners in the industry and the people whom IAPMO serves will aid our goal of providing training that not only increases code knowledge, but also helps individuals become better professionals in general,” said IAPMO Executive Director GP Russ Chaney.

Individuals interested in registering for any of these free courses are invited to visit www.iapmo.org/onlinelearningcenter and set up a free account.

This offer is for a limited time only, so anyone interested is encouraged to act soon.
